Break alerts: Same as AFK alerts, if you cannot respond to urgent emails/messages while being on breaks, follow the same procedure.

Planned leave alerts: Thumb rule is, to announce it the day you plan it. No need to wait! The more in advance, the better it is for your RM, Team and Client to manage your absence. All like people who communicate things in advance and avoid surprises.

Work Handover: Before going on leave, review your tasks which are pending and need attention. Give a summary of these tasks and status to the team (or TL) so that they can discuss with you and take appropriate action in your absence.

3. Work From Home Best Practices

Standups Absences: We will understand these if you are on leave, in all other cases, please inform proactively to the organizer and to your clients if you are not being able to attend it for any reason (do mention the reason in your communication). If you can't communicate, quickly ask someone to do it on your behalf. Technology is there for your aid; all you need is to be responsible and attentive about it.

Meetings

Invitation: Always respond to the meeting invitations as soon as you receive them. You must click on either "Yes" or "No". In case you are saying "No", please enter a valid reason for the organizer to understand and respond to. You not responding to an invitation and not joining the meeting, is a BIG NO!

Joining: Thumb rule is to always attend a meeting, a minute before the actual time. In case you are running late, do inform the organizer. Once in a while miss is fine, but a regular/frequent miss is an area of concern and must be addressed.

Use of Video: Always try to have your Videos ON. This allows for a more effective engagement during the meeting thereby providing better outcomes.

Prefer Laptop/desktop over mobile phone: Usually one or the other person in the meeting may decide to share screen or more importantly you may have to share your screen. It is important that the experience for you as well as everyone else is good. So please, use either a laptop or a desktop to join the meeting.

Record the Meeting: It's preferable to record your meeting with the customer although you should ask the customer before doing that.

Minutes of the Meeting: Always one person in the meeting group should provide minutes that captures the summary as well as with designated follow-up actions.

Agenda: If you are the organizer of a meeting, please ensure to add agenda points in the meeting description. It is to avoid surprises and to engage and prepare the participants beforehand. This also helps the participants to evaluate and prioritize the meetings and respond to the meeting invites, accordingly.

3. Work From Home Best Practices 70

Behaviour during meetings

Speak out during standups: A minimum ask! It is important to not only share your work progress, but also discuss challenges, share recommendations and views, brainstorm, ideate and work towards innovation and improvement. So, next time you are in a standup, please think about all these aspects and suggest proactively what the customer can improve at his end (at least to your lead).

Be alert to account growth: Look at new developments and requirements in your project and reach out to TFT as soon as you feel that TFT can contribute more to it by adding more Professionals or Consult clients on the way forward. Even if you are not sure about it and it feels like a gut feeling only, do not hesitate to share it with us.

Be conscious about the environment: Always keep a note about your surroundings, especially in the project you are working on. You should get well-versed with the complete project and Client company, keep an eye on the changes and developments in the project work, team structure, people movement and more. It will help you develop and establish your own presence, trust with the client, and contribute to point #3 mentioned above.

Avoid deliberately pointing mistakes in front of clients (especially of your fellow TFTian, if any. That should be resolved within TFT level discussions).

Appreciate help/support provided by fellow TFTians, or by the client.

Project Needs:

Voice Out: If you see things are not going well in a customer project. You feel there is underutilization of your time and skills, or you have become overburdened please discuss it with your RM, or mark an email to resources@tftus.com.

Seek proactive feedback from customers regularly: Always approach your client counterparts/managers and politely request them to share developmental feedback from them. Do not react if the feedback is not what you are expecting, capture it with a smile and share it with us (HR team) if you are not able to decode it or need help understanding it the correct way. If you do understand, work on it and improve.

Skilling needs: Proactively reach out to us if you observe new tech stack introduction, requirement of new learning, or an ask from the Client directly to learn something new. We will definitely arrange resources and support for you to pick up these new skills.

3. Work From Home Best Practices 71

Inform about a peer not working out well or Not attending standups: If you work in a team, it is important to take all together and if one is falling short behind, we are accountable and responsible to push them. Be a whistleblower and point out such situations to the HR and Resources team, proactively.

Engagement and Communication:

Engagement with customers: Understand your customers, try to discuss formal/ informal subjects with them, understand their region and background and have your discussion accordingly. Read more about them through their professional and social profiles, read about their culture if they are from a different one, and adapt according to it, so as to engage with them better and avoid doing things which they can take otherwise.

Engagement with the leads: Go beyond leave communication, approvals, appraisal discussions etc. with your Team Leads, and encourage them to share feedback with you, mentor you, discuss your career path and growth options, and share your concerns and challenges. They should be your first point of contact in all cases.

Peer meetings: Internal team meetings and standups are equally important. Do not miss them unless it is necessary and follow the above guidelines related to meetings in this scenario too. These are important for you to maximize your peer learning process, share your learnings with others, brainstorm ideas, innovate and develop new things, and contribute to your holistic development.

Email Etiquettes

When to avoid sending emails: Emails are best for providing status, asking a question, sharing minutes, keeping a record for audits later on, to name a few use cases. It should never be used for carrying out an active discussion. Please use more responsive communication means like chats/video meetings/phone calls for the latter purpose.

Use of email content Formatter: Always use the built-in text formatter to correct the formatting of the content, resize it, provide better spacing and indentation, and to split it into bullet points. It makes your email easy to read and thereby has a greater impact.
